

What Is Mom Trying to Tell Me? Groupon Survey Reveals 1 in 5 Americans Have Received a Gift They Felt Had a Hidden Meaning

December 13, 2017

- Research shows that moms lead the pack of passive-aggressive gift-givers followed by spouses and mother-in-laws
- Top hidden meanings of gifts include becoming more productive or organized, making diet improvements, increasing number of trips to the gym, learning how to cook and spicing up sex life
- Men are 67 percent more likely to receive a passive-aggressive gift from their mother than women and are three times more likely than women to throw out a 'bad' gift within 48 hours of receiving it
- Insect repellent was named America's most unwanted gift this holiday season, followed by a self-help book, cleaning supplies, wrinkle cream and fruitcake.

CHICAGO--(BUSINESS WIRE)--Dec. 13, 2017-- Have you ever opened a gift and wondered what sort of message the sender was trying to convey by giving you that self-help book or a pair of socks? It turns out that subliminal messages, passive-aggressive behavior and forced smiles are commonplace during the holidays, according to a new survey. Groupon asked 2,000 people about gifting trends during the holiday season and found that one of out five Americans have received a gift they felt carried a hidden meaning.

Survey participants said their moms are the biggest culprits when it comes to trying to tell them something with their gift choices followed by their spouses and mother-in-laws. According to the results, some of the top hidden meanings of gifts included: becoming more productive or organized, making diet improvements, increasing trips to the gym, learning how to cook and spicing up the sex life.

"These results give us an indication of just how much people read into meaning behind their gifts and show that it's worth making the extra effort to get everything right," said Aaron Cooper, president of North America, Groupon. "Connecting a gift back to something meaningful is always the best and easiest way to make sure it goes over well."

The survey, conducted by market researchers OnePoll and commissioned by Groupon, found that men are 67 percent more likely to receive a passive-aggressive gift from their mother than women and are three times more likely than women to throw out a bad gift within 48 hours of receiving it.

Groupon's gift-giving study also discovered a significant amount of stress results from trying to give the perfect gift. More than a quarter of respondents, 28 percent, have suffered genuine anxiety at the thought of getting the right gift and four in 10 experience nerves when handing over their purchases. One in five said the worry over what to buy even causes them to lose sleep.

Insect repellent was named America's most unwanted gift this holiday season, followed by a self-help book, cleaning supplies, wrinkle cream and fruitcake. The average American expects to receive at least one gift they won't like, which they'll get rid of in about 13 days.
