

Procrastination Nation: Last-minute Shopping Vexing Gift Givers

December 21, 2017

- More than half of shoppers paralyzed by the hard-to-gifters on their list
- Moms and dads rank as the most difficult family members to buy gifts for this holiday season
- With age comes wisdom -- shoppers become more certain of what gifts to buy as they get older

CHICAGO--(BUSINESS WIRE)--Dec. 21, 2017-- Everyone has that one friend who finished their holiday shopping on Dec. 1 (and they haven't shut up about it since). For most of us, there are still a lot of boxes left to tick, and with Christmas falling on a Monday and shipping deadlines quickly expiring—things are starting to get grim. The reason? Some people are just impossible to buy for.

A Groupon (NASDAQ:GRPN) survey of 2,000 Americans revealed that more than 50 percent of people have no idea what to buy someone on their list with moms and dads ranking as the most difficult family members to buy for this holiday season. And this finding isn't unique to just Groupon. According to the National Retail Federation, 90 percent of us fail to complete our holiday shopping by mid-December. The leading cause? Utter indecisiveness.

"Look, no one wants to be the person doing their last-minute shopping at a gas station on Christmas Eve because they waited too long to shop for that impossible person on their list," said Aaron Cooper, president of North America, Groupon. "Groupon's local experiences are delivered instantly and a lot more personal than a Christmas tree air freshener and a tire pressure gauge."

The survey, conducted by market researchers OnePoll and commissioned by Groupon, also found that shoppers become more certain of what they want to buy as they get older. Participants in the 18-24 age group said they were the most uncertain of what to buy while those 55 and older rated themselves as the most confident.
